

MOMTRENDS SILK'N BEAUTY BRUNCH

Posted on July 20, 2015 by Kristin Swenson

If there is one thing the women in my family have in common, it's their willingness to age gracefully. I wasn't raised with the notion that there is something wrong with growing older. Instead I was encouraged to look at each and every year as a blessing filled with treasured experiences and memories. That being said, my mother and grandmother are certainly not opposed to taking care of themselves. In fact, I remember my great grandmother, the woman they were raised by, meticulously applying her favorite facial cream every evening.

While I don't mind being in my thirties, in fact, I'm having more fun than ever...I'm quite keen on maintaining my appearance and if I can even look a few years younger, you'll hear no complaints from this girl. Haha! So, I, along with some top beauty bloggers, was thrilled to learn about Silk'n anti-aging beauty products at the Momtrends Beauty Brunch last week. The ReVit microdermabrasion tool, in particular, spoke to me...

The event was held at the beautiful Oasis at Pierce Mattie space. Upon arrival, we had the opportunity to really examine the Silk'n products that were on display. After being handed a tasty mimosa, I poured over the ReVit for a bit. I knew pretty fast that it was something I wanted to try. I haven't quite reached the point where I'm ready for intense in office procedures, but I'm certainly willing to test out at home beauty treatments. And considering that I have an age spot and fine line or two that I would love to see diminished, it sounds like the gentle vacuum stimulation that comes from the ReVit is right up my alley! The tools were so accessible and demos were given to anyone interested, so that, obviously, further solidified my interest.

And if I wasn't already convinced that I needed the ReVit in my life, I would have been after hearing the lovely Dr. Judith Hellman M.D. speak. First off, she mentioned how gentle it is. For a girl with sensitive skin, finding a tool that won't irritate it too much is no easy feat. She also stressed the importance of prevention versus treatment. So, while you might not think you need anti-aging products quite yet, if you are diligent about a beauty routine now and regularly use products, like ReVit, you just might not have as much to worry about later on in life!

To say it was a privilege to learn about Silk'n and listen to Dr. Hellman's words of wisdom would be a gross understatement. This glamorous and informative brunch was just what I needed to inspire me to revamp my anti-aging skincare routine! Stay tuned for my review of the Silk'n Revit microdermabrasion tool. It will be coming your way next month!
